The first point to be discussed will be the use of the Marquis of Queensberry code of Commission rules, and the indientions point to the Queensberry code as the winner. These rules are mentioned in the articles of agreement, and so they have governed every champion.

Elaborate preparations are being made to report the contest on a scale exceeding anything of the kind at previous ring battles. The record established at Rene with the gathering of newspaper writers and photographers for the Johnson-Jeffries fight easily will be surpassed. as they have governed every champion-ship battle since the bare knuckle days passed into the discard there is small question they will be in force at Bay seats have been reserved in various sec-View Park on July 4.

Another point that will come up for discussion is that of bandages. Willard and his advisers harbor the suspicion that Dempsey's bandages have been the points from the scene of the conflict to harden them after the gloves are to harden them after the gloves are to harden them after the gloves are points for European service. drawn on, and the champion will insist that the bandages be put on in the ring every effort will be made to keep the soft spots back of the bases. Another subject of dispute is the "rab-bit killer" punch, which is delivered on the back of the neck when the victim's head is bent forward. Both Willard and Dempsey have employed this blow against their sparring partners, and while it is prohibited in a majority of class.

Now that the training of the men ! practically completed arguments as to the probable winner are heard on every side. The argumentative persons even go to the training camps and indulge in flery debates while the bexers are at work in the ring.

"He's slow, is he?" shouted a man of pugnacious disposition while Willard was boxing. "Call that slow?" he added as Willard ducked a lead from Mona-ghan and then peppered his sparring partner on the nose. "Oh, that is all right in a prearrange
